TESTIMONY

Some months before my wedding in 2015 I attended a friend's wedding while applying make-up on my face a friend pointed out I didn't blend my makeup properly just close to my ears there was a patch there that looked like my foundation so I tried to blend but I discovered it wasn't foundation and I didn't know what it was and it was the first time I was seeing it. I just ignored and continued with my make-up.

Weeks after I noticed the patch was still there and had spread more. I would always have these concerns from people, oh you didn't blend your make-up properly, and I will just say thank you. I didn't know what it was, how it got there and I didn't bother checking it out, not because I was in faith, but because it wasn't painful, so it didn't bother me. Different people called it different names, discoloration, pigmentation and some I can't even remember, I was less bothered.

And it started spreading, so it gave me a little concern. Where fear crept in was when I saw someone with that same kind of thing spread to her neck and covering part of her face. Alarmed, I thought to myself, is it how this thing will spread and cover my face before my wedding ah! God forbid I exclaimed. Then I knew I had been tolerating what I didn't want so I started speaking the word of God intentionally to it and I would say to it 'you no reach wetin make Jesus die for cross for' and since it was not part of my covenant benefit I didn't want it, but it seemed the more I spoke to it the more it spread and it became so visible my make-up artist did a good job in covering it with make-up for my wedding. Whenever I look at the mirror, I would speak to it, cursing it from the root.

On one occasion, one of my sisters looked at me and said this thing is really spreading, and immediately I countered her confession and replied it's evidence that it is going. It's shifting away and I believed what I said and had peace deep within me and that was it. I stopped observing it and took my eyes off it because I knew my healing was a done deal. Gradually, it started clearing until I almost forgot anything like that was ever there. Now when I look at the point where it was, I see a dot which reminds me of how differently it would have been if not for God's faithfulness. Indeed, the work of God in our mouth is power and life.

God's word has shaped my life and my daily experiences simply because I've seen it work here.

Glory be to God!
